Sr. Clara Muhammad was a bright light of leadership in the mid-twentieth century in North America. She was brave and strong; a woman who acted upon her principles. Sr. Clara was the first to hear Fard Muhammad speak, she then invited her husband, and soon after the Nation of Islam was born. She was also a pioneer in homeschooling. Her educational vision spread farther than her own eight children, though, and she opened a system of private schools that educated and uplifted young black, Muslim children. Sr. Clara Muhammad loved and lit up the way for many. Her life is a legacy of leadership for future generations.
